Ruth Phillips Painting Now Displayed at Public Restrooms on Main St.

Ruth Phillips painting installed on south side of restrooms.

Ruth Phillips was a well-known local artist. She was one of the nine members who began Palisade Art Lovers and served as the first president in 1979.

In 1966, When the Palisade Women's Club wanted something interesting on the west wall of the Independent Lumber Company across Kluge Avenue from the Post Office, they tapped PALS artists.

The first set of paintings were framed and hung to hide the unsightly wall. The Town had the paintings taken down in 1969, so in 1974, the Women's Club again raised funds and new paintings were hung in what had become Independent Park. PALS and Women's Club members and their husbands hung another set of paintings on August 21, 1982.

Because they faced the strong sun, a third set of paintings were hung in 1991.

In February 1994, when the Independent Lumber Company was down, the Palisade Women's Club gave its remaining treasury to the Town of Palisade, asking them to safely store the paintings until a suitable place could be found. At the time, it was hoped the paintings would be displayed in what is now the Town Plaza.

This Ruth Phillips' painting was recently chosen to adorn the south side of the newly renovated public bathrooms on Main Street.

Jordan's Inn Window Display Draws Interest

The Palisade Historical Society's Jordan Inn display.

Jennifer Lasley and Charlene Weidner's creative window display at the History Center calls attention to the 100th anniversary of Jordan's Inn burning to the ground in November 1915 has garnered a lot of positive comments.

The display features graphic photos of the smoking rubble of the former two-story brick hotel and office building, courtesy of Bill Beckwith. You can see an amazingly intact china plate found in the ashes the next day by Alonzo Akers, which was donated to the Historical Society by the Dodd family. There is also a clever, three dimensional photo of Jordan's Inn before the fire.

A reprint of The Palisade Tribune November 19, 1915 front page article about the fire, offers very interesting details of the disaster. The bottom of the window sill is simulated burned rubble with charred paper, bricks, broken bits of glass, and pieces of china. Caution tape around the border adds to the fire scene.
